

The Office of Faith-Based and Community Initiatives (OFBCI) is committed to serving Oklahoma's poor and disadvantaged by establishing faith links between government, faith-based congregations, and community organizations to address social service needs in our communities.

One approach to this mission is to inform and educate individuals on aspects of life that might be outside their everyday world. With that in mind, we are pleased to present:

Delanie Brewer, an accomplished mom, wife, actress and woman of faith, has created these sketches out of a desire to tell the stories of individuals throughout America's black history and their journeys of faith.

En route to Freedom, a poignant story about a free negro woman and her struggle whether or not to get involved with her white employer's abolitionist activities with the Underground Railroad. In helping others escape to their freedom, she may very well jeopardize her own....

"Harriet Tubman: A Moses to Her People" takes place at an Underground Railroad fundraiser in 1861. America is a nation on the verge of civil war over the issue of slavery. At the heart of this struggle is Harriet Tubman, a runaway slave turned fearless conductor for the elusive slave escape network called the Underground Railroad. Despite the $12,000 bounty on her head, Harriet continues to risk her own life and freedom by going back into the South to lead other slaves to freedom up North. Hear in her own words how God leads her through these underground adventures.

Either of these dramas may be presented in a 15, 30 or 45 minute format. For more information contact: dbrewer777@yahoo.com or (405) 760-2497.

OFBCI hopes this presentation will motivate you to examine your own faith journey and determine your intentionality in serving others.
